A Holiday for Two

by Luella B. Lyons

"THIS being with the family on Christmas is the bunk so I won't mind parking myself down there in Martinville, Mr. Howard," Paul Boyd told his employer. That's how he found himself spending the holidays in a lonely little room in a boarding and rooming house. His landlady had gone out to church services, he knew, but he determined to pass the lonely hours by reading, having prepared himself with a flock of new detective fiction before leaving the city.

Before another half hour had passed, Paul tossed the book aside and began pacing the floor. Here he was alone at last on one Christmas eve, far from too-concerned relatives and friends.

As the crowning insult, without a moment's warning, the little light that hung on a single cord from the ceiling, flickered and went out. "Great day, this is the end! I wonder what they do here when the lights go out—go to bed, I suppose!" he muttered disgustedly. But just the same he began scratching matches to hunt for a possible kerosene lamp he might have overlooked. Five matches later, he found a candle and lost no time lighting that. "At least I can find my way about while getting ready to retire," he grumbled.

But as he jerked at his tie, the unmistakable sound of a smothered sob came to him through the hot air register. Paul wanted to be alone, but sobs did things to him and it took him just three minutes to locate the door from behind which was darkness and those sobs.

All because a thoughtless landlady had failed to provide the lovely and lonely girl with an extra bit of lighting in case the rather unreliable power company service discontinued without notice, wasn't the only reason for the sobs.

"Being in a noisy city where folks are celebrating, asking all kinds of favors of you at the holiday time, doing the same old parties, family dinners and all that—I thought it would be nice to escape it for a change," she explained. Jean Hathaway, she said was her name.

"Jean, I said the same thing and maybe we were both right only that—that," and suddenly he became embarrassed but struggled on, "that it is all okeh if you don't have to escape alone. Just one for company and for celebrating is about the right number. What do you think, Jean?"

"Alone together! It doesn't make sense as for English, but it does Christmas-edly speaking!" and the light of the candle burned high and proud on that holiday for just two.

THE CHRISTMAS CAROL

by Helen Waterman

THE Christmas Spirit, if such a sprite there be, must have fled in dismay from old Silas Wentworth, for a crustier, harder, less Christmas-spirited man would be hard to imagine.

Yet Sally Blaine, his clerk and bookkeeper, had the temerity to bring Christmas into the store, stringing lines of tinsel.

Old Silas, coming to work, stopped and stared at this unusual addition to the colored globes and patent medicines with which his windows were adorned.

Sally Blaine, rather frightened now, looked up. "Merry Christmas, Mr. Wentworth."

Silas surveyed the store grimly. "Take it down!"

But Sally hesitated.

"I said take it down. More of your fool notions! What's this?"

"Dickens' Christmas Carol, sir."

He thrust the book on a back shelf. "Humph! Don't let me catch you reading on the job."

"Yes, sir. I'm sorry about the decorations—"

At nine o'clock on Christmas eve Silas saw out his last customer, and began putting up the shutters. It was beastly cold, and his numb fingers were slow at their task. As he was about to lock up, he was confronted by two men, one carrying a revolver.

"Let us in and lock the door," said the man.

Silas, his teeth chattering from more than cold, complied.

"Now if you're quiet you won't get hurt," said the spokesman. "My pal here has had an accident. I need some medicines. You'll be paid all right."

"Of course; of course," Silas answered, and brought out a stock of supplies.

The wounded man spoke up. "Sorry to keep you on Christmas eve, buddy."

Silas grunted. "Tommyrot."

The other man had been rummaging about the store. "Here," he commanded. "I can't watch what you're doing. So you read aloud until I get through." And he handed Silas "Christmas Carol."

He was scarcely half way through when the men paid him and left. He threw the book down and started off, but at the door he turned, and sitting by the night light, read again. "So like me," he muttered, as he finished.

From the wastebasket he drew out the tinsel and strung it awkwardly around the store. He looked through his accounts marked "Overdue," and selected several bills which he marked "Paid in Full," and put in proper envelopes. Then he got his wraps.

"Merry Christmas, Silas," he exclaimed, and went out to the dawning of his first merry one in many years.

COME!

Let us go up to Bethlehem, the House of Bread, for we have seen His star in the East, and the glory of His coming from afar. The Divine destiny of all the ages is not static, but vibrant, clear with purpose and power. It is radio-ranged to soul and sense. The Voice of God is crying from out the wilderness of all yesterdays, calling a sinsick, visionless and perishing world to repentance and restored faith.

Precious and compelling is loving memory. Merciful and mighty is the Living Christ who calls us to reconsecration, as the sands in the hour glass of spiritual opportunity run swiftly to the last. We are living indeed in a radiant age. Spiritual gifts are ours from the very Father of Light in Christmas abundance. Let us turn then and tune in to his station within our templed hearts. The Holy Night is near, when with angels and archangels and all the host of heaven we worship at the manger cradle of the King of Kings.

This Christmas Eve the absolute divinity, the perfect humanity of the Bethlehem Babe leads us, as never before, through the deepening darkness of this stumbling world to share with the goodly fellowship of the prophets in adoration and thanksgiving for the fruition of the hope that heals and holds all souls and all time.

It is not a classic fable or a sublime fantasy we treasure in this venerable Christmastide. It is rather the one priceless jewel of faith and philosophy enshrined in the heart of humanity. It is the incarnate hope of the whole world. It is the visible manifestation of the Fatherhood of God and the real Brotherhood of man.

When then, in the hallowed stillness of the Silent Night, at Holy Communion, we come to kneel in mystic fellowship with the Shepherds, the Magi and the whole Company of Heaven, may we be still and know that He is God, who, wrapped in swaddling clothes, lies in the rude manger of the lost world He came to save.

To the Parish, the Community, the people of my heart; and to all those to whom I minister in His name, in the larger sphere of my calling, I send this Blessed Season's Greetings. May the Christ Consciousness of all joy and purity, and peace enfold you with His Presence.

TONY LOSES $167 CURRENCY FROM CASH REGISTER

Some fellow who is not particular just how he gets his money entered Tony's DeLoma cafe the night of December 4th between 2 and 4 a. m. Tuesday and took $167 currency from the register which had been left for the proprietor by the last man on shift that night. Considerable silver in the same register and another small cash register on the other side of the room was not taken. The thief could have had another $45 or $0 but likely was too lazy to carry silver money.

MOVING DAYS FOR SEVERAL FAMILIES

Dr. and Mrs. Frank R. Felt left Saturday last for Seattle where they embarked on a freighter for India, in which country they expect to remain for several years.

Dr. I. W. Parks moved into their home on Del Monte avenue and Rev. James H. Hughes this week has been busy moving into the residence at the head of Newport avenue vacated by the Parks.

Group Medicine Plan Found Successful

By applying a group system to our medical, surgical and hospitalization expenses, Gordon D. Latham, speaking before the Ocean Beach social-civic forum Tuesday evening, pictured the manifold advantages of such a budget plan from the viewpoint of both the public and the medical profession.

Startlingly, he spoke of the "progressive, business-like" United States as the only country without a general system of medical care. All the others have such a system at least partly state-supported. For centuries the Chinese have paid their medical bills by the budget plan, but they contributed to the fund only when they were well. This had the effect of inspiring the doctors to do their best so that they could quickly return to the paying status.

From the public's point of view the disadvantages of having no budget plan have manifested themselves disasterously. The costs fall unevenly regardless of the family income, and as a consequence less than half the population receives adequate medical service. The inability of the masses to pay for unplanned medical attention causes unnecessarily high death rates and is responsible for innumerable cripples, as well as untold mental suffering. The loss in money paid out for ineffective service and the loss in wages falls most heavily upon those who are least able to bear such burdens.

The death rate can be reduced at least one third by a budget system; in Canada it has been reduced fifty percent. A more specific example of the advantage of a group system is provided by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., which, thru its nursing service, has extended the life span of its policy-holders eleven years and has reduced the death rate in maternity cases twenty-five percent. At the same time they tripled their profits thru such expenditures.

At the present time the country spends more for medical care than for education, because in the latter case we have adopted an up-to-date system, while in the former we have tolerated a condition which has no place in a modern society in which conscious planning is necessary for the welfare of all the people.

And altho we hear much about the medical costs borne by charity, such groups pay only five percent of the total medical bill. Industry, with its employees compensation acts, pays but two percent, and fourteen percent is paid by the government thru public welfare and other departments. The general public still pays seventy-nine percent of the total costs.

The professional group also feels keenly the disadvantages of an unplanned medical service, because their overhead is approximately forty percent and their incomes uneven and uncertain. Considering their long and expensive education and the free service to those unable to pay, most physicians are paid very little.

A great gap, becoming more and more apparent, exists between what the people are able to pay and the fee which the doctor can afford to accept. As a consequence both sides suffer, and the waste in human life and well-being and in money is inexcusable in a so-called enlightened country.

Altho the United Stats has no medical service Mr. Latham stated that several large groups have inaugurated group-medicine and group-hospitalization plans to overcome the waste and other disadvantages of an individualized condition. One of the most notable of these groups is the Roos-Loos Medical Group of Los Angeles, requiring the services of one hundred five physicians. (Dr. Loos, one of the founders, was former city health officer of San Diego.) Altho the group is organized on a profit basis the monthly dues, which cover all medical, surgical and hospital services, are but $2.50. Its membership includes over 2,000 Los Angeles teachers, most of the county and city employees, and groups in many of the industries. It has the largest X-ray equipment in America, and outside of the new Los Angeles county hospital, has the most modern and complete equipment of all kinds in the country.

The Roos-Loos Medical Group is a living and successful example of the cooperation between the medical profession and the people. Thru such a plan the physicians are assured of adequate incomes and growing reputations, while the people receive de luxe medical service at a minimum cost.

Other such groups are being formed thruout the country, some on a profit and some on a non-profit basis but in any case to the advantage of all.

The principle of group medicine and group hospitalization has been endorsed by the American Medical association, according to Mr. Latham, and its rapid growth is inevitable.

Christmas Charity Card Party Dec. 23

Marie A. Ruggles—Chairman

The second annual Christmas card party sponsored by the American Legion and V.F.W., posts of Ocean Beach will be held at 8 p. m. Wednesday, Dec. 23rd, in the Women's clubhouse, this organization having donated their hall for the purpose.

This party for the entire benefit of needy ones of the beach should be patronized liberally in order that none may be wanting food or necessities at the Yuletide season.

Bridge, 500 and pinochle, with lovely prizes for each, will be featured as the entertainment for the evening.

Mrs. Marie A. Ruggles is chairman of the committee with the following active assistants: Mmes W. C. Madigan, Allen R. Palmer, John McCaffrey, James Dick, Hugh Reynolds and T. R. Evans.

FUNERAL SERVICES HELD FOR MICHIGANDER

Albert Reynolds Martin, 63, Spanish war veteran, died Tuesday at his residence, 4631 Larkspur st., Ocean Beach. Rites were conducted under the auspices of the Masonic order at 2 yesterday afternoon at Bradley Woolman's chapel. Interment in Greenwood cemetary.

A native of Coldwater, Mich., Mr. Martin was a member of the Coldwater lodge, F. & A. M. He had resided in San Diego 21 years. Mr. Martin was a plumber for 49 years, retiring in 1926. He is survived by his wife, May Martin; two brothers, George and E. F. Martin, Coldwater, Mich.; and a nephew, J. A. Tomkins, Detroit, Michigan.

High School Gridders Feted Tuesday Night

Ocean Beach Kiwanians cooperating with the boys department of the Point Loma Methodist church, Tuesday evening entertained Point Loma's high school 1936 Metropolitan league football champions at a dinner in the church dining room, the banquet being a very pleasing affair for all those taking part.

Rev. James Hughes was chairman with Jake D. Watson, president, presiding. Coach Joe Beerkle assisted in the ceremonies with City Playground commissioner W. A. Kearns leading the singing of several well known numbers.

Rev. Myron Insko welcomed the boys and congratulated them on winning the league championship this year.

Gold footballs were awarded by Coach Beerkle to the varsity members after which Principal Clarence Swenson made special awards of a similar token to Dr. Burton, team physician; Coach Chas. Wilson and Joe Beerkle.

Dr. I. W. Parks, in behalf of Dr. J. W. Wilhoit and himself, presented a very splendid trophy to the winning team, to be kept in the trophy case of Point Loma high school as a permanent memento of their good fortune and prowess this year.

Dad Bingham served his part of the program by giving "Mudville's Defeat" with Casey at the bat.

About fifty men and boys throughly enjoyed the evening and many hoped the occasion could be made an annual affair.

School Board Waking Up At Last

Ten acres or more of the high-lying level parts of Collier park are desired by the school board as a site for a new school to serve the Ocean Beach section.

This was what City Manager Flack was told by Will C. Crawford, city superintendent of schools, when the two inspected the park property Wednesday.

The park contains 30 acres. The school board wants at least 10 acres.

The manager said that city engineers soon would begin surveys and measurements of the area desired by the school board, so the legal description could be placed on the ballot next spring when the people are to be asked to approve transfer of part of the park for educational uses.

SAFETY CANDIDATES— ANNUAL STAFF APPOINTED

Ray Hepner with two candidates, Charles English and Jeffries Hall participated in the Lions club campaign on safety. Hepner was selected the winner of the Point Loma High school group. The Hillcrest Lion's group sponsored the Point Loma group.

Hepner with the candidate selected from each of the city high schools will go to Imperial Valley soon to take part in the finals to select the winner of the contest.

Miss Ruth Henry of the English department at Point Loma was in charge of training the boys.

Editors and staff for the spring Point Loma Annual were named recently. Jane Karl will head the staff and will be assisted by Maxine Carl. Morris Landon was chosen business manager.

Plans for a fine annual are now made. Mr. Kenneth Christiansen will assist the students in the business arrangements and Mrs. Ruby Grey Johnson will as usual supervise the art work, which always wins for the Point Loma annuals a superior rating for that section.

Following the Christmas program which was Point Loma's gift to the community, the students taking part had a party in the music room. Singing, dancing and refreshments were enjoyed.

OUT-OF-STATE AUTO VISITORS URGED TO CHECK LICENSE DATA

Motorists from other states who plan to obtain California car registration for 1937 should check up now on their credentials.

In order to facilitate procedure and receipt of new number plates in January without difficulty, it is suggested that out-of-state registrants visit a motor vehicle department or an automobile club office as soon as possible and present their papers. License clerks will make certain that the registration and other required certificates are in correct order for application for California number tags during the renewal period from January 2 to February 4, 1937.

"Not going out?"

"I'm staying in town."

"Stayin' in town?" stammered Bull, vastly surprised.

"Drive me to the hotel," Jane said wearily. "I'll take a room there. You drive home and come back for me tomorrow afternoon."

It was ten o'clock. Assigned to a room, Jane freshened herself after the long, dusty car ride, bathed her face and temples again and again in cold water, and tried to collect her throbbing thoughts.

It all seemed like a hideous dream. Surely it could be shaken off; surely men could not be so fiendish as to plot fire and so horrible a death as would follow to sleeping men.

Her father! She shuddered. This thought was most horrible of all—incredible—and yet . . .

Of one thing she felt certain: if it were true, she could no longer live under the same roof with him, and the terrifying duty of learning the revolting truth from his own lips confronted her.

And her lover—Bill, blinded Bill—what now of him? Could she ever face him again? What would he say? What would he do?

He knew the truth. No doubt remained in her mind on that point. No need now to ask why he seemed worried and changed. Was he only waiting, trying to decide how to tell her he could not marry her—that her father had blinded him—that they must part?

She threw open her window and kneeling before it, looked out upon the silent, far-stretching desert with its myriad of heavenly lights. The cool air cleared her head. But what could loosen the deadly grief and shame that clutched at her pounding heart?

When Dr. Carpy walked into his office from the dining room after breakfast next morning, he saw Jane Van Tambel standing before the window, looking out.

"Why, Jane!" he exclaimed. "What brings you here so early?"

She looked around at him in silence. The doctor walked over to her and laid his hands on her shoulders. "Jane," he asked, "what has happened, girl?"

The grief in her sunken eyes was too apparent.

"Oh, Doctor!" The exclamation came like a burst of suffering long pent. "I know everything."

He saw the fat was flatly in the fire. Indeed he had long had only a faint hope of keeping the facts from Jane. His real hope had been that she might not hear the truth till he could save Denison's eyes and thus cushion the horrid shock that the facts must bring to an innocent sufferer.

She had thrown her arms on the table in front of her. Her head sank between them.

Dr. Carpy rose, walked around to her side, lifted her head and, standing beside her, supported it in his arms. "Jane," he said slowly, looking down into her pitiful eyes, "from what you tell me, I see that you have heard loose stories floating around."

"You, too, have heard them, Doctor. Why, oh, why didn't you tell me?"

"Jane!" exclaimed the doctor, driven from his last stronghold of reserve by the poignancy of her grief. "How the hell could I tell you a story involving those it did in such an affair? Actually, nobody knows just what the facts are. Now we must get started right. First you tell me all you heard. Then I'll tell you all I've heard—is that fair?"

Brokenly, and pausing at intervals to control her voice, Jane gave him the train story.

Carpy had bowed his head.

"Well," he commented as she looked soberly up, "that's not far from what I've been told myself. But, Jane, I'm not a bit sure we have the facts in these stories. They all depend on the word of one of the worst characters in this country. Barney Rebstock wouldn't hesitate at anything low down in the whole range of crime—anybody in town will tell you that. He's not only an ex-convict but the biggest liar in this whole country."

"Doctor," she said solemnly, "does Bill know all that you and I know?"

"Jane," he answered in like, "Bill knows all that you and I know."

"Oh, I knew it. I knew it. To think that poor I should have brought this horror into his life!"

"Jane, that's not so. This might all have happened if you never had seen this country."

"I want you to do one last favor for me, Doctor. Will you?" asked Jane.

"What is it, Jane?"

"I want you to say to Bill that I freely release him from his promise of marriage; that I beg him to forgive me all I have innocently caused him to suffer—and that I will leave here forever——"

"Jane!" exclaimed her listener.

She raised her hand, "I've not finished yet."

"Go on!" he snapped, bluntly.

"My father has made me his heir to Gunlock ranch; he has no other heir. This morning I will make my will and bequeath whatever I inherit from my father to William Denison, to atone as far as I can for the wrongs my father has done him."

"Well?" remarked Carpy coldly.

"That is all."

"And that is what you want me to tell Bill?"

"That, Doctor, is what I want Bill to know. Oh, if I had another to do it for me, dear Doctor, I wouldn't put it on you."

Carpy rose to his feet.

"Jane, you're sending me on a fool's errand. But seeing I'm nothing but an old fool, I expect I'm just the man for the job. I can tell you now what he'll say as well as if I'd seen him and given him your message. But I know, of course, that wouldn't satisfy you. So I'll go—and go now.

"Now promise," he repeated, in parting, "you will stay right here in this office till I get back."

She promised.

But she was ill prepared for what she saw when the office door was opened half an hour later and Doctor Carpy pushed Denison ahead of him into the office. Bill's eyes were bandaged. He groped a little with his hands, while the doctor guided him to a chair.

"Here he is, Jane," announced Carpy bluntly. "He can speak for himself."

She had not an instant to wait. No sooner did Denison feel himself seated in a chair than he held out his arms and said, apparently not with deep feeling, not with pained emotion, but in the most commonplace, everyday, matter-of-fact manner: "Where's my girl? Come here!"

"Bill, I Thought You Ought at Least to Have a—"

The old doctor watched Jane run timidly to Denison's side. "Bill!" she exclaimed brokenly. "Here I am!"

"What's all this talk I hear about your quitting me, Jane?" he asked unsteadily.

"Bill, I thought you ought at least to have a——"

"Well, I've had my chance, haven't I? And this is my answer. Till death us do part! Nothing less, nothing else goes! Is that plain, girlie? I gave you a chance the other day to quit me—what was your answer?"

CHAPTER XII

Jane did not go home that afternoon. She sent Bull and the buckboard back with instructions not to come in for her until she sent word. She wrote a brief note to her father, merely saying that she had attended to his business and would be home in a few days. Van Tambel, in an impatient rage, sent Bull back with an order to Jane to come home at once or not to come home at all.

The harsh message made less impression on his daughter than he had intended; but it did bring back the answer that she would be out soon.

When the buckboard next day drew up at the ranchhouse door, Jane alighted with a fast-beating heart.

Fortunately, when she got home, her father was out in the hills. Her welcome came from Quong; it sort of broke the ice of the home-coming. But she went to her room, got out her two old suitcases, dusted them off, laid them on her bed and, stripping the hooks of her closet and opening the drawers of her dresser, began almost furiously to pack.

While she was at this, she heard the heavy uneven steps of her father in the living room, and the next minute his huge bulk darkened the open doorway of her bedroom.

"Hello!" he snapped.

She turned. "Hello, Father," she responded simply.

"What are you doing?"

"Packing."

"What f'r?"

"Preparing to go into town."

"What you goin' in town agin f'r?"

"I've got a job in town, and I'm going there to work at it."

"What kind of a job?" he snorted.

"I'm going to study nursing at the hospital."

"What the hell you goin' to do that f'r?"

"Because things have been done from here that make this place hateful to me. I couldn't stand it here any longer."

"What things you talkin' about?"

She looked at him steadily. "I'm talking about burning Bill Denison's ranch house."

"What's that got to do with your quitting home?"

"Everything. Everybody's talking about that fire. Barney Rebstock has told that you paid him for setting fire to a neighbor's ranch house with men sleeping in it."

"Why, that fellow's the worst —— liar in Sleepy Cat. Nobody believes anything he says."

"I can tell you everybody believes it," she said, trembling.

"Do you believe it?"

"Father, I am forced to unless you can convince me you had nothing to do with it. This wretch has had a pocketful of money."

Van Tambel regarded her with perfect poise. "Why, I did give him a little money. I'll say I've been sorry for him. I know he hates Bill Denison—a good many folks in this country's got no use for that——"

"Stop!" cried Jane. "Don't say anything against Bill Denison. He saved my life!"

"—that damned, dirty, ornery rustler and thief——"

Jane's eyes blazed. She stamped her foot. "Don't you dare!" she cried. "What you're saying about him is what everyone in this country says about you."

"Yes? There's some damned mean people in this country," thundered her father. "Just look out yourself, my lady. I don't know any more about that fire than you do. If Barney Rebstock wanted to get even with Denison, that's his business, not mine. You shut your trap."

"That's not all."

"More lies, eh?"

"McCrossen has told in town that you once tried to get him to set the house on fire and he refused to do it."

"He lies! He did do it! I gave him five hundred dollars to do it. He agreed to do it and took the money to do it. If he hired Barney Rebstock to start the fire that's his lookout! I left you here to watch things, and McCrossen has been running off my steers ever since I went to the hospital. He knows I know it. He knows I'm going to get after him. And I will," he shouted with a frightful oath. "Now look here! I'll tell you where you get off. You're not going a step to town! I know your scheme; you're going to live with that man Denison——"

"Father!"

"Yes, I know you. You don't leave this house!"

Loading every sentence with rage and oaths, Van Tambel seized a suitcase from the bed, dashed it to the floor, stamped on it.

"Now you go to town if you dare," he roared. "And if you leave this house today, never come back—if you do I'll kick you out. Get out of my sight, before I choke you!"

She hurried from the room and from the house.

What should she do? Escape was first in her thoughts, as she hurried up the hill trail. When she could partially collect her distracted senses, she had wandered well into the hills. She threw herself on the ground and tried to think.

She never knew how long she was there. But shadows were lengthening when she rose. She was hungry. There was nothing to do but go down and get something to eat; then, if she could keep out of sight of her father, to start for town.

She walked to the house in fear. But she reached the kitchen without seeing her father. Quong gave her dinner. He told her her father had gone to the Reservation. Afraid that her father would return before she could get away, Jane started for the corral. Bull Page was fastening the gate when Jane walked up to him. "I must go to town, Bull. I want a horse."

"It's again orders, Miss Jane, to let a horse out for you. Gus is a-rarin' mad for some cause."

"I know, Bull. He's angry at me. I can't help it."

Bull scratched his head. "His orders are dead agin lettin' a horse go out."

"No matter, Bull. Never mind."

She started to walk away. "What you goin' to do, Missy Jane?"

She turned with a sorry smile. "Guess I'll have to walk. Good-bye."

"Hold on," he called, hobbling after her. "Hold on! You ain't goin' to walk!"

"Bull, I don't want to make trouble for you. I'll walk."

"Trouble be damned. I've seen Gus mad before—he'll get over it. I'm goin' to saddle a horse."

Jane hestitated. But, dragged out as she was by excitement and worry, she doubted whether she could make town on foot. She surrendered and climbed onto the horse he had saddled.

"Bull," she said, "why do you take all this trouble for me?"

"Why, I'd do anythin' in the world for you, Missy Jane. You're the one person on Gunlock that treats old Bull like a man an' not like a dog. Why, if I up 'n' just died for you, it wouldn't be too much."

"Good-bye, Bull."

"So long, Missy Jane."

A dispute wtih the agent on the Reservation over a cattle delivery held Van Tambel at Flambeau until late. Bull Page unsaddled and put Van Tambel's horse into the corral.

"Where's Jane's pony?" Van Tambel demanded.

"Why, I guess she's out with it, Gus," suggested Bull.

Van Tambel flared up. "Didn't I give you and everybody else orders not to let her take a horse till I gave permission?"

Santa Comes Marching Home

BY ALICE B. PALMER

GREAT preparations were in progress for the annual Christmas reunion at the Thomas home in Glendale. Lauris was decorating the living room with streamers of red and green and hanging bells and mistletoe above the doors. The holly wreaths were already hung and father had arranged the colored lights on the evergreens in the front yard the night before.

"Will be home for Christmas."

"Johnny."

Mother had proudly read the telegram aloud to the family and all were simply bursting with holiday enthusiasm, for Johnny was really coming home.

"Lauris dear, won't you please baste the turkey? and Bonny Jean, you may pick over the cranberries for mother."

All was hustle and bustle in the kitchen of fragrant odors. Mother was wholly surrounded by delicious sour cream cookies which she was busily tinting in the Christmas colors of red and green. The refreshing aroma of the traditional cardamom seed and of the spices, was most pleasing. Even little Tim was privileged to aid in this glorious Christmas preparation when mother told him he could pile the cookies into the cooky jar, counting them as he did so.

When things were well on their way toward completion, mother sent the children into the living room. "I want you to pack all the gifts in that large box the grocer brought," said mother, "and wrap that holly paper around it so it will look more Christmas-like."

"All right, mother," they shouted, in a chorus of happy voices, as they scampered in. They had glorious fun amongst the gifts slyly peeping beneath the sides of the gaily colored wrappers and feeling to try and guess the contents. Mother chuckled within as she heard the merry peals of laughter and happy confusion.

Soon all was in readiness and the late afternoon sun was casting its long wintry shadows across the snow coated landscape. The soothing twilight on Christmas eve was at hand in all its splendor and the happy family gathered about the gorgeously lighted Christmas tree to await their Santa Claus. Father was cozily seated in his own easy chair, holding forth in his usual jovial manner, always calm and silent and truly understanding.

"Soon now, my children," said father, "we shall hear the train whistle which is to bring our Johny home."

Johnny had mentioned that he did not wish to be met at the station and his desires had been duly respected.

Instead of a train whistle, they heard the loud roaring and buzzing of an airplane.

"Oh, I bet Johnny is coming by plane," shouted Lauris.

"I just bet he is, too," cried Tim, all excited.

"I wouldn't be surprised," grinned father, knowingly.

There was a rush to the frosted window to see if anything was in sight.

"Oh, mother, look at poor old Mrs. Johnson sitting all alone over there in her window seat. Doesn't she look lonesome though?" said Bonny Jean.

"Let's invite her over for the evening," suggested mother. "She was telling me the other day that her son, Joseph, would no be home for Christmas."

"Yes, let's," they all chimed in, beaming with the Christmas spirit.

"That's a very fine idea," agreed father, smiling kindly. "You run over, Tim, my boy, and ask her if she would care to join us."

"Oh boy," shouted little Tim, chuckling at the opportunity of getting out to throw a snowball.

Some moments later, the dear little lady was in their midst, smiling her gratitude toward each one of them.

"It was kind of you to offer to share your Christmas with me," she said. "It has been pretty lonely this year without my boy."

Just then the door burst open and in stepped Santa Claus. The children almost wrecked him in their excitement. He dropped his heavy pack and shouted, "Merry Christmas," with all the strength and energy he possessed.

Mother couldn't stand the suspense another moment. She tore off his mask and hugged and kissed him hungrily.

Johnny stood, aghast, taking in the whole beautiful situation. The brilliantly lighted tree, the star of Bethlehem gleaming at its peak and little Tim jingling a rope of sleighbells all in his honor.

But the best was yet to come, for he opened the door and in stepped a tall, handsome soldier, his face flushed with a happy holiday smile, his garments covered with the Christmas snow.

"Hello, mother," he said, as he rushed into the out-stretched arms of the smiling Mrs. Johnson.

After all questions had been satisfactorily answered, Lauris began singing at the top of her voice, "When Santa Comes Marching Home." The others sensing the grand idea, joined in with a jolly good spirit of fun, in the combined Christmas reunion.

CANDLES AND CHRISTMAS

CANDLES have become associated with Christmas and with church ceremony because during the early ages when Christians were persecuted they were forced to hold their assemblies of the followers of Christ in the darkness just before the dawn, the room lit by candles.

Choosing Bird for Christmas Dinner

CHOOSING a Christmas turkey of the right size this year will assure every guest plenty of delicious meat and at the same time avoid the usual post-Christmas series of turkey hash meals, according to Miss Annabelle Robinson, associate in home economics education at the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.

A general "rule of the thumb" is to allow three-fourths to a pound of dressed turkey for each guest. If the bird is to be served with dressing, the ¾-pound allowance probably will be ample. If there is no dressing, more meat will be needed, and the larger allowance will be the safest.

At the above rates a 15-pound turkey will feed approximately 20 people, while a 10-pound bird will be sufficient for 13 guests. Since many families do not plan to have more than five or six at the Christmas table, even smaller birds probably will be in demand. However, it usually is better to get a bird weighing at least ten pounds dressed, since smaller turkeys do not develop as fine a flavor. Unless the size of the turkey is entirely out of proportion to the number of dinner guests, enough will be left for only one or two meals of cold turkey, Miss Robinson said.

Whether the turkey is chosen from the home flock or bought at a market it should be a fat, plump bird and preferably a young one. The skin should be smooth and clean, and the breast and thighs plump and meaty. The bird should be reasonably fat, since the fat imparts a better flavor and prevents the dry, tasteless flavor common to turkeys in poor flesh.

HOLLAND'S SANTA

CHILDREN of Holland believe that St. Nicholas was a kind-hearted Spanish bishop who had heard about their land of dikes, windmills and tulips and decided to pay it a visit, says Johan Hart in "Picture Tales from Holland." He arrived there long years ago on December 5, and began giving children presents. Since then he has always returned on that night to fill the wooden shoes of Dutch children with gifts. The children in turn leave out some carrots or hay for his horse.

In Good Company

Company is one of the greatest pleasures of the nature of man, for the beams of joy are made hotter by reflection when related to another.

The man who makes no mistakes does not usually make anything.

Luck usually favors the man who doesn't count on it.

The Present Moment

Try to be happy in this present moment, and put not off being so to a time to come.

A good provider never lacks an admiring eye.

A man may frequently think and say he is misunderstood, but the man who thinks he is and doesn't care sufficiently to say anything about it, is the most admirable.

The Beautiful

BEAUTY has been the delight and torment of the world ever since it began. There is something irresistible in the beauteous form. Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

THE RATS LEAVE THE BIG BARN

BILLY MINK'S second visit to the big barn had been an occasion of great pleasure to Billy and terror to all the rats who lived there. He had hunted them just for the pleasure of hearing their squeals of fright and the scampering of their feet as they raced this way and that way seeking safety. With his wonderful nose he had followed them to their most secret hiding places. Three he had caught and he could have caught more had he really wanted to.

"We've Got to Leave This Barn," Replied the Gray Old Leader.

When he had become tired of the hunt Billy had curled up for a nap in a corner of the haymow where it was dark and quiet. He had done this instead of going back to the woodpile. It was very comfortable there. Besides, it would be very handy to be right there when he felt like hunting again.

It wasn't very long before all the rats knew just where Billy was. One of them had happened to pass near enough to smell Billy, and had at once passed the word along to all the others.

"Now is the time," said the wise old leader, "for us to get together and attack him. Who will join with me?"

Not a single rat came forward. The gray old leader shook his head sadly. "You are cowards, every one of you," said he. "If you will not fight there is just one thing left for us to do."

"What is that?" squeaked one of the young rats who had been loudest in his boasting before Billy Mink had appeared the second time.

"We've got to leave this barn," replied the gray old leader. "If we remain here it will be to die. That mink will stay here, or if he doesn't he will keep coming back until he has hunted down and killed every rat. We must leave the barn, and do it at once. There is no time to be lost. Probably he is asleep now. By the time he awakes we must be out of this barn. The rat who doesn't leave it now never will leave it."

Immediately there was a great discussion. Every rat there knew that the wise old leader was right. But where should they go? It was winter, and they could not live long out of doors. They must go to a place where they would find both shelter and food. They might as well remain to be killed by Billy Mink as to go forth and starve or freeze to death. At least that is what some of them said. Some suggested one thing and some another. Finally they turned to the gray old leader for his advice. They had followed him so long that they had learned to trust to his wisdom.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

UNUSUAL MACARONI DISHES

THE following recipes received prizes as the best dishes prepared with the use of macaroni:

Macaroni Fantasie.

Cut four slices of bacon into small pieces and fry, add four tablespoonfuls of butter or bacon drippings and six tablespoonfuls of bread crumbs, two cupfuls of fresh diced cucumbers, one small can of tomato sauce, two cupfuls of cooked and drained macaroni, stirring as lightly as possible. Beat two eggs and stir in with a fork, remove from the fire, add eight chopped walnuts, salt and cayenne to taste. Stuff six green peppers which have been parboiled fifteen minutes. Bake in a baking pan until thoroughly heated. Serve hot.

Macaroni Butterscotch Pudding.

Melt one cupful of brown sugar and two tablespoonfuls of butter over the fire and cook until dark brown, but not burnt. Pour the mixture over a pint of hot milk and simmer for ten minutes. Take one cupful of drained, well-cooked macaroni and cover with the milk and sugar mixture, add two well-beaten yolks of eggs, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt and a teaspoonful of vanilla. Pour into a baking dish and bake forty-five minutes. Beat the whites stiff, add two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar, the juice of half a lemon, beat again and spread over the pudding. Brown in a slow oven. Serve hot or cold.

Macaroni Fritters.

Take two and one-half ounces of macaroni rings, cook in salted water until tender, drain and add one and one-half cupfuls of canned corn, one-half cupful of milk, one teaspoonful of salt and a slightly beaten egg yolk. Sift one and one-half cupfuls of flour with four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, mix all together and add the stiffly beaten egg white. Fry in deep fat or on a hot griddle.

KNOW THYSELF

by Dr. George D. Greer

DOES A MAN MAKE A BETTER HUSBAND IF HE HAS HAD SEVERAL LOVE AFFAIRS?

IN GENERAL, a man who has had the opportunity of knowing several women as friends is more likely to make a suitable selection of a mate than the man who had only one sweetheart. The same applies to women. However, there are so many exceptions to this that a rule would be silly. Some people who never had but one sweetheart before marriage awaken to the fact that they had little knowledge of different people when single, and start taking interest in others after marriage. This is very unfortunate. I would prefer for my son to marry a girl who had had dates with other boys besides him, and I would prefer him to go around with several girls before he picks one for a bride, —but he might be just as happy if he didn't.

TO HEAR HIMSELF

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

TO BARK a hound enjoys
Just for the sake
Of hearing all the noise
That he can make.
No rabbit is around,
No stranger near,
He merely barks, the hound,
The bark to hear.

I do not blame the pup,
For I know men
Who also whoop it up
Now and again.
They speak no word of worth,
No bright remark:
They only want the earth
To hear them bark.

That hound that always yelps
Men cease to heed,
And shouting never helps
A man succeed.
You'll find, in all life's walks,
Upon the shelf
The man who merely talks
To hear himself.

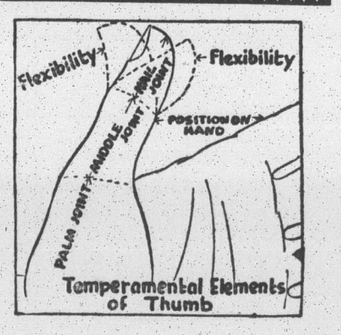
THE LANGUAGE OF YOUR HAND

By Leicester K. Davis

© Public Ledger, Inc.



YOU have now learned that the thumb has a very real significance to those who become masters of the mysteries of the hand. As in dealing with other elements which in final combination are an accurate index of the inner self, each element of the thumb should be thoroughly understood.

Temperamental Elements of the Thumb.

The thumb, telling as it does, the unvarnished truth about many an inherited and acquired trait which so strongly characterizes you as "you" and me as "me," is remarkable in its revelations. As you progress with study of the thumb, you will learn how well the Ruler of Our Destinies has given compensations for what would otherwise be serious deficiencies in temperament. Such compensating elements are found throughout the hand, but nowhere so clearly indicated as in the thumb.

The illustration charts for you the position of temperamental indications of the thumb. Fix these in mind. Base your analysis of the thumb upon: (1) Its length, (2) its position on the hand, (3) the respective lengths and contours of the first, or nail joint, the second, or middle joint, the third, or palm joint, and (4), the amount of flexibility or rigidity throughout the entire thumb.

Pest "Protects" Country

Nigeria, part of British West Africa, is rich in tin, but few white men are able to live there. It is a country manifestly for the Nigerians. A native leader, once proposing to erect a colossal statue to the savior of Nigeria, was naturally asked to what great statesman he referred; to Wilberforce, perhaps? "Not at all," said the Nigerian, "the mosquito!" True enough, for if not for the mosquito the white men would flock there in thousands.

STATESMANSHIP AND WORLD PEACE

The Pan-American Peace Conference was a devout assembly of world dignitaries. Let us hope that great fruitage will come from it. One of the highest tasks of statesmanship is peacemaking, because true statesmanship is sincerity founded upon unselfishness. It proves that the good of one can be the good of all. It is far-sighted because it looks toward enduring gains rather than opportunistic advantage. It is humble. Teachable and resilient, it lays aside all personal pride power and prejudice to achieve a noble purpose and here lies the great secret for good fruitage.

So this is true statesmanship, and it is no use to "talk peace" until we get imbued with this indwelling attribute of virtue and grace. But while the Conference was going on, the Krupp Gun Works, busier than at any time since the World War, observed its 125th anniversary with 100,000 workers on the payroll! This is not all; Russia announced that she had marshalled under the Soviet hammer and sickle a million well-armed soldiers, and that her air and submarine fleets continued to grow. From Great Britain word came that the Empire is spending this year a billion dollars for national defense, manufacturing gas masks at the rate of two million per month, and that by the end of 1937 she expects to have stored thruout the land a gas mask for every man, woman and child.

With a victory of the rebels, Spain bids fair to join the six other powerful European countries in which individual liberty has surrendered to dictatorship. In the meantime, America continues to spend $2,000,000 per day on armaments, and is planning for a gala day with 15,000 people present at the Brooklyn Navy Yard when, official Washington will see the launching of the "Brooklyn", a $15,000,000 cruiser.

South Americans seem to think in terms of the whole continent, and will act in unison with all the powers of the western hemisphere on all affairs that deal with neutrality, war and trade. This is the present aspect for world peace, and unless Europe and beligerant nations fall into line there is still a long, tedius road to travel, leading to peace.

The Southern California sporting world, with some exceptions, seems satisfied over the Rose Bowl football choice for the big game on New Years Day. The University of Washington, the objective, a powerful first-class team and certainly one of the best in the country, were given high honor for selecting their own rival team for the game. To say that the Pittsburg Panthers were their choice, goes without comment, for the former preferred to line up against the strongest possible team. Publicly speaking, the best choice from past records, would have been Louisiana State; the hottest rival, Alabama; but the players' choice was the Pittsburg Panthers. Altho they were defeated once and tied once, they have an impressive record in major competition. They have a very strong schedule, emerged with 203 points to 34, and were awarded the Lambert Memorial trophy, supposed to represent the eastern football championship. Altho considered the best choice, yet a surprise for many, who wanted to see the Bayou Tigers because they hold a better record than the Pittsburg Panthers.

Next Monday will be the shortest day of the year. The sun will rise approximately at 7:30 a. m. and set at 4:30; nine-hour day, with a 15-hour night, the longest night of the year. Next June 21st, the exact opposite occurs (the longest day and the shortest night.) What could be more accurate than our great solar system of which the earth belongs? No clock work ever surpassed, or ever will equal such regularity, and this same constant regularity has been going on for millions of years! Not the slightest hitch or delay, but always the same invariable periodic recurrence! Such a phenomenon must be and is superhuman, and enlarges the fact that this old world is under Almighty guidance, and that without His powerful ruling, this old restless dwelling place, which is only a speck in the universe, would soon be tottering in confusion and inescapable calamity and disaster.

CHRISTMAS AMONG THE PINES

By Jocile Webb Pearson

BIG BILL, in spite of his six foot four was a boy at heart. Boss of a logging crew he could be plenty stern when occasion demanded, but a Christmas tree and all the lights and cheer that goes with it was his weakness.

"Christmas is no fun without kids," was the way he put it. But, it looked like Bill was doomed to disappointment this year.

The crew were lounging around the fire after a hard day's work when Pudgy Sam, the cook, shook the ashes out of his pipe and said: "What's the reason we can't have a Christmas just like home right here? Plenty trees, if we can muster the trimmin's."

"Christmas No Fun Without Kids," the Way He Put It.

Bob, the kid dishwasher, was all enthusiasm. "We've got popcorn. I've strung yards at home for mom. Sam's got a harmonica, and Dave a Jews harp, an' some of you fellows can sing. And I'll trim the tree."

"The Boss wouldn't think much of a Christmas without kids," put in Dave. "There's the Martins. They got a couple kids; we can ring them in. I was by there t'other day an' heard them talkin' about Santa comin'."

"Boss said Martin looks sort of beat out, too," said another. "Suppose we appoint Bob, here as a committee of one to extend our invitation for them to join us. I feel we owe them something, the way they helped us when some of the men had flu."

Big Bill was jubilant with their plans. "You fellows took the wind out of my sails, but you'll do a better job than I could."

"Oh Little Town of Bethlehem," lead by Sam's harmonica, floated out from lusty throats upon another star-strewn night.

Big Bill in a scrambled suit of red flannel and a hemp beard was a satisfactory Santa Claus to at least two happy children. He handed out gifts to everyone. Sam had done his best on the feast that followed, and everybody joined in the "three cheers and a tiger" for a jolly Christmas among the Oregon pines.

A House Built Christmas Day

...by...

Frances Grinstead

A HOME that was built on a Christmas day stood for a long time on the old Santa Fe trail where it passed near Arrow Rock, Mo., on the Missouri river. Though not quite completed in a single day, with the help of his neighbors on that "holiday" about a hundred years ago, Henry Nave got his cabin ready for his family and the day after Christmas took them into his shelter.

Of course the house was built of undressed lumber, felled right on his farm. When he had selected the location this pioneer cut down round poles for the walls, rafters and joists—the framework.

Mr. Nave had found some large, flat stones, and in the afternoon they dragged these into place for the hearth. Then of other suitable rocks, by much puffing and pulling they built a fireplace—one of those great practical ones which served to heat the home and to cook venison, buffalo meat, corn pone and other "victuals." The exterior of this fireplace was wood, the stones providing a fireproof lining.

The mortar to bind the stones was chiefly mud; to obtain even this simple ingredient it was necessary to build a fire in the middle of the half-constructed cabin and thaw the ground.

But, writes this hardy woodsman, "It was not many days until we were living snugly in our cabin and in good health and with fine appetites."

Holidays among our ancestors were made occasions for such celebrations as this, but they never witnessed the cessation from labor ours afford. There was always need for immediate shelter, crop harvesting, or game killing. Hence log-raisings, corn-huskings, and gun-shoots were made social occasions. But do you suppose we ever have more fun than Henry Nave's family and friends had building a house on Christmas day?

Mrs. Craw Closes Series With Interesting Lecture

In the last of a series of PTA psychology classes Tuesday, Mrs. Helen Craw covered a wide field of problems constantly confronting parents. She discusst at length the importance of correct sex education for children, and pointed out the danger of producing harmful complexes by failing to meet all questions of the children in a straight-forward manner free of all secretiveness. Instead of treating hitherto "alarming" situations in a negative manner by attaching shame or punishment to them, parents can direct their children into healthy, happy adulthood by redirecting their energies, diverting their attention and freeing their minds of all curiosity as soon as it is aroused. Certain sex or body situations discovered by parents are probably but "little red flags" to tell them that more information is needed.

It is especially desirable to have animal pets for children for they provide concrete examples to help the parent explain clearly the life processes. It is important to speak simply and to use professional terms rather than invent nicknames.

The main principle to be observed before adolscence is to detach any emotion from the idea of sex.

Another major problem, which is often unrecognized by parents, is the inferiority complex. Its causes are diverse and it may be manifested in extremely contradictory ways. The complex may be the result of a feeling of insecurity or physical inferiority. Some of the greatest harm is done by teasing and by emphasizing a child's differentness or in any other way making him constantly the center of attention.

Acting instinctively, the child builds a self-defense which compensates for his abnormal and unwholesome state. He may become a cry-baby or a bully, a day-dreamer or a thief, and often a braggart.

However his feeling of inferiority is exhibited, the old idea of punishment, criticism and condemnation is taboo among modern psychologists. Mrs. Craw emphasized the importance of treating such individuals as invalids, as they in reality are. There is a fundamental human need to feel powerful and important, and it is the job of parents to see that this urge has a legitimate expression. Drama, music, art and sports provide excellent outlets, and parents whose children are active in these ways will find their juvenile delinquency problems disappearing.

In speaking of allowances for children, Mrs. Craw said that by letting them budget their expenses from an early age their feeling of responsibility has a normal chance to develop. From time to time more necessities should be added to the list which he buys, with the result that his discrimination and judgment increase as well as a desirable feeling of adult importance. By sixteen the boy or girl should be able to select all needs intelligently.

The child's responsibility in sharing household chores should not be confused with jobs which earn him extra money. These outside jobs should be a matter of choice with him, and it is a wise parent who can subtly provide incentives and extra jobs for the child who wishes to earn money in addition to his allowance.

Lutheran Mission

Immanuel Lutheran will hold its first Christmas services in the newly erected Kunz Memorial chapel, Sunset Cliffs Blvd., and Cape May Ave.

The Pre-Christmas service on Dec. 20th, having as its theme: "Triumphal Arches of the King" taking place at 10:45 a. m. will be preceded by the Sunday school sessions at 9:30. The Bible hour at 7:30 p. m. will consider the life of John the Baptist.

"Christmas Everywhere" will be the theme of the children's service on Christmas Eve at 7:30. The children and the choir are taking over the major portion of this beautiful service.

Christmas day will bring with it the complete order of service for the day. Services at 10:45. The joyful Christmas message will be delivered by the Rev. Martin Lankow. Special music by the choir. "O come let us adore, Christ, our Savior".

OCEAN BEACH SCHOOL

CHRISTMAS HEALTH PLAY

Children in Mrs. Confer's L2, H2 room gave a Christmas health play in the auditorium Thursday afternoon. A lighted Christmas tree decorated the stage and stockings were hung over the high fireplace. Mother Goose, Jack Horner, Simple Simon and Boy Blue all made their appearances. Health Brownies acted the part of real brownies and recited their health rules. The fairy queen and her attendants danced to the strains of soft music while last but not least jolly old St. Nick came with his pack and sleigh bells. Children taking part in the play were: Ann Caraway, Eveline Barclay, Douglas Brown, John Bailey, Everett Douglas, Billy Robison, Robert Smith, Patricia Milligan, Ella May Money, June Oliver, Leither Ann Smith, Paul Bench, Jimmie Burdette, Quentin Decker, Donald Kirk, Earl Lennon, Robert Messerly, Richard Stangl, Joan Clarkin, Vivian Horton and Colleen Neal.

ATHLETIC BANNERS

Boy's athletic banners were won by the teams of the following captains: Joe Lohman, Wayne Bailey, Richard Kimball, Lawrence Purdy, and Lee Anderson. Bonnie Collier's team was presented the boys' sportsmanship banner. Girl's banners were presented to teams of the following captains: Amy Lou Temple, Jacqueline Reeves, Betty Miller, Nita Malcolm, and Jacqutline Reeves' team won the girls' sportsmanship banner for the week.

ROOM 11 NEWS

Boys and girls of the fifth and sixth grades have formed a vested choir to sing Christmas carols for the Christmas program to be given in the school today. The program will consist of "Little Town of Bethlehem", "Come all Ye Faithful" "The Birthday of a King" solo by Mary Adele Trushinski joined by the choir, "The Infant Jesus" solo by Julia Martin joined by the choir and "Silent Night" sung in two parts by the choir.

Room 11 is a very busy place this week. In addition to editing the school paper, the H-5, L-6 class is busy making Christmas gifts for parents and friends. Secrecy prevents our disclosing the nature of the present!

CAMP FIRE GIRLS

Camp Fire Girls of Ocean Beach Schools were hostesses at a Christmas party on Tuesday in honor of Miss Farnum, sponsor of the group. After refreshments, served buffet style, an impromptu program was presented and gifts were exchanged. Everyone agreed that the party was a great success.

ROOM 13 PLAY

Martha Wisdom, Dorraine Dehne, Marie Kruger, Mathew Hegerle, Sherman Boles and Wyane Bailey presented an original play in the auditorium Monday afternoon. The play was an outgrowth of committee work in Social studies. The theme of the play was the study of the silk worm. In planning and executing it the children were enthusiastic and spontaneous.

ROOM 7

The Fourth and Fifth grades in Mrs. Moon's room are entertaining their mothers this Friday afternoon with a Civic League program. The retiring officers, Wilberta Jarrard, John Ostrom, and Minnlyn Kelly will install the new officers, Jane Price, Edward Williamson, and Alan King.

A program featuring Christmas carols and poems will be in charge of Betty Mae Miller.

C.H.M. CHRISTMAS PARTY

The C.H.M. class of the First Baptist church held their Christmas party at the home of Mrs. Griffith Williams, 3728 Wynona drive, Friday evening, Dec. 11, with Mrs. W. S. Dunn assisting hostess. The main business of the evening was the election of officers for the coming year. There were twenty-two present. Each lady brought a gift for her classsister, and there were many surprises as the packages were opened. This was followed by games after which refreshments, carried out in the Christmas motif, was served.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Is the Universe, including Man, Evolved by Atomic Force?" This question is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon on Sunday in all branches of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts.

One of the Bible selections in the Lesson-Sermon includes these verses from I Chronicles: "Sing unto the Lord, all the earth; shew forth from day to day his salvation. Declare his glory among the heathen; his marvellous works among all nations .... For all the gods of the people are idols: but the Lord made the heavens .... Fear before him, all the earth: the world also shall be stable, that it be not moved. Let the heavens be glad, and let the earth rejoice: and let men say among the nations, The Lord reigneth."

The Lesson-Sermon presents also the words from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "God creates and governs the universe, including man. The universe is filled with spiritual ideas, which He evolves, and they are obedient to the Mind that makes them."

Beauty Hints

By Jane Heath

YES your Christmas gifts can be luxury gifts at a tiny price! Kurlash gifts to beautify the eyes are something every woman and girl of your acquaintance would delight in owning! Imagine the excitement of receiving gold and silver eye shadows!

And if you want to go more swank include a Kurlash eye beauty brush.

Then again we'll bet every young—and not so young person on your list would "give anything" to have curly eyelashes. You can be sure that Kurlash, the famous little wonder that curls eyelashes to petal loveliness (and does it all in thirty seconds) will be received with loud whoops of joy!

Another suggestion is Lashtint, the liquid mascara, to darken lashes to exotic beauty. It's waterproof, doesn't crack or smart, and comes in a divine little modern shaped glass bottle for her dressing table.

IVERSON L. HARRIS

THEOSOPHICAL LEADER TO SPEAK SUNDAY NEXT ON "WHO ARE YOU."

Next Sunday afternoon at three o'clock, Iverson L. Harris, regional vice president of the Theosophical society, will endeavor to answer from a Theosophical standpoint the age-old question: "Who Are You?" in a public forum-lecture at the society's temple on Point Loma.

"From Socrates to Dr. Alexis Carrel," says Harris, "great thinkers have considered this the most important question that a man can ask himself. I shall cite the answers given not only by the great spiritual teachers of mankind, like Jesus, Krisha, Buddha, Lao-Tzu, Confucius and Mahomet, but also the fightings of the most famous philosophers of ancient and modern times, like Plato, Aristotle, Bacon, Spinoza, Voltaire, Kant, Schopenhauer, Spencer, Nietzsche, Emerson, Carlyle, Bergson and Carrel.

"I think I shall be able to show to any unbiassed, intelligent, and aspiring mind, that the Theosophical conception of man, as promulgated in modern times first by H. P. Blavatsky and now by Dr. de Purucker, is the most comprehensive synthesis of all the factors involved in the religious, philosophical and scientific aspects of human consciousness."

Harris has been a resident of San Diego for the past 37 years and has had his entire schooling at the Theosophical institute on Point Loma. He traveled for 20 years with the late Katherine Tingley as her private secretary over many parts of the globe. During the World war he was assigned to the Judge Advocate general's department at headquarters Camp Lewis, Wash., where he served not only as general court martial reporter, but also as interpreter in Spanish, French and German.

METHODIST CHURCH

CHRISTMAS SERVICES

A special Christmas program has been arranged for next Sunday morning at the Methodist church. The chorus choir under the direction of Lynn Winans present the following music—

1. "The Seraphic Song" by Anton Rubenstein. Solo parts by Mrs. Irene Taylor. Violin obligato by Mr. Fred Butler.
2. Song of the Virgin Mother, by William S. Nagle. Solo part by Mrs. Helen Ozhure.
3. A violin solo by Fred Butler accompanied by Mrs. Robert Stirling.
4. "Gloria in Excelsis" Gounod Chorus choir and quartette.
5. Processional by the choir and prelude of Christmas carols.
6. Rev. James Hughes will speak briefly on the subject, "New Truth from Old Tales."

There will be no evening service. The Epworth league, however, will hold its regular meeting at 7 o'clock.

Wednesday evening the church school will give a Christmas program. The children will be heard in songs, recitations, and pageants. Santa Claus will greet the children, at 7:15 Wednesday evening.

BAPTIST CHURCH SERVICES

"The Heart of Christmas" will be the pastor's sermon theme in the hour of worship Sunday morning at 11 o'clock.

The choir will render special music directed by T. Morley Harvey. The one hour evening service begins at 7:30 p. m. at which time the pastor will speak on the theme "The Gift Unspeakable." The junior choir will sing the Christmas carols.

You are cordially invited to the services of this church.

Warren-Walker School News

The classrooms of the Warren-Walker school look very festive with their red and green decorations of Santa Clauses, Christmas trees, candles and pointsettias that the art class made.

The Christmas program was largely musical. The Christmas story from the scriptures was read followed by living pictures and songs.

Those taking part in the living pictures were:

Mary, Ann Havlicek; Joseph, Donald Smylie; Shepherds, Tony Snedicor, James Willis, Shefrah Rozenstain, Robert Drinkwater; Kings, Philip Cook, Larry Hackett, John Campbell; Angels, Donna Roberson, Jane Titlow, Jimmy Lewis, Jay Moe.

The choir was dressed in black and white choir robes which made a very pleasing picture. Those in the choir were Nancy Read, Jean Pope, Shirley Eno, Judy Pinney, Don Telquist, Stewart Fox and Tickie Read.

All the favorite Christmas carols were sung by the choir. During the singing of each carol a new picture was presented.

Dan Rarey gave a reading called "Christmas" Bob Roulette opened the social hour with a recitation on "Gift Giving." This was followed by the distribution of gifts that the children gave to one another.

Each child brought one article of food to put into a basket to be given to a family for Xmas.

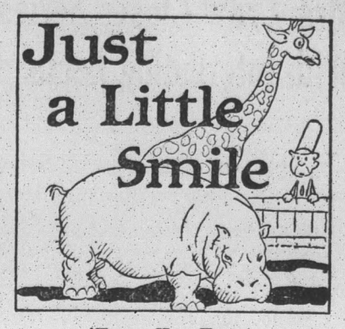
Just a Little Smile



'Twas Her Treat

"Angus, ma son, hae ye been oot wi' that lassie again?"

"Aye, father, but why are ye worried?"

"Ah wis wonderin' hoo much it cost ye."

"Juist twa shillings an' four-r-r pence."

"Ah, that wis no sae bad!"

"It wis a' she had, father."

But a Man

"Wha' are you, anyway?" shouted Mrs. Henpeck during the quarrel. "A man or a mouse?"

"A man," answered Henpeck bitterly. "If I were a mouse you would be up on that table yelling for help."

HARD ON HIM

"Sad about Brown—an embezzler, and in broken health, too."

"Doctor's fault; gave him iron for his blood and it made him steal."

Need of the Masses

Park Orator: "My friends, if we were to turn and look ourselves squarely in the face, what should we find we needed most?"

Voice from the crowd: "A rubber neck."

Mrs. Simpson Offers to Free King Edward

DISTRESSED by the storm over King Edward's proposal to marry her, Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson, lovely American divorcee, took refuge in the villa of friends at Cannes, France, and there made a dramatic gesture of renunciation. Through Lord Brownlow, gentleman-in-waiting to the king, she gave the correspondents this statement:

Mrs. Simpson

"Mrs. Simpson, throughout the last few weeks, has invariably wished to avoid any action or proposal which might hurt or damage his majesty or the throne.

"Today her attitude is unchanged and she is willing, if such action will solve the problem, to withdraw forthwith from a situation that has become both unhappy and untenable."

This offer to abandon her romance was transmitted to London and all the world awaited the response of the king, in his seclusion at Fort Belvedere. Unhappiness is the fate of both Edward and "Wally", whatever the decision may be. If the king relinquishes the woman and retains the throne, Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin and the cabinet, together with the aristocratic caste, will have scored a victory, but the contest between the new and the old will certainly be renewed in other form.

At the time when Mrs. Simpson gave out her statement, it appeared that the king had scored a point. Mr. Baldwin, having failed signally to induce the monarch to abandon his determination to wed Wally, gave in to the extent of sidetracking the abdication issue and giving King Edward ample time to come to a final determination. He told the house of commons this and related the whole story of the controversy which, he said, was precipitated by the king himself when he informed the prime minister of "his intention to marry Mrs. Simpson whenever she should be free." Mr. Baldwin said the king "will no doubt" communicate his decision in good time "to the government in this country and the dominions." He added: "It will then be for those governments to decide what advice, if any, they would feel it their duty to tender him."

Replying to a warning from Winston Churchill that the government must not try to "extort" abdication from the king, Mr. Baldwin said: "It has always been, and remains, the earnest desire of the government to afford his majesty the fullest opportunity of weighing the decision which involves so directly his own future happiness and the welfare of all his subjects."

But, he added, both the government and the king were aware that "considerable prolongation of the present state of suspense and uncertainty would involve the risk of gravest injury to national and imperial interests."

In what the prime minister said it was made evident the king never had stated his intention of making Mrs. Simpson queen; and it appears the monarch was told that neither his government nor those of the dominions would countenance legislation making possible a morganatic marriage, which Edward desires. On this point neither the king nor the cabinet has yielded, and to date Edward has shown no intention of abdicating.

King Edward

Having learned all about the Simpson affair when the British press dropped its self-imposed silence, the British public took hold of it with excitement and enthusiasm. Crowds paraded in London, carrying banners with such inscriptions as "God Save the King From Baldwin." They booed cabinet members and the archbishop of Canterbury, who was steadfast against the marriage, and surged about Buckingham palace in great throngs.

Blum's Spain Policy Wins Support of Deputies

PREMIER BLUM of France, for the first time calling for a vote of confidence, won the chamber of deputies to the support of his policy of neutrality concerning the civil war in Spain, and this victory saved his regime from disaster. The vote was 350 to 171. The communists refused to vote because they could not approve the "blockade of republican Spain," but affirmed their support of the Popular Front government. Following the vote the cabinet ministers all decided to retain their posts.

Foreign Minister Delbos told the chamber of deputies that France would give army, navy and air aid to Great Britain and Belgium if they were attacked without provocation. He also said that France soon would propose at Geneva "a practical plan for reduction of armaments which will include provisions for publicity on military expenditures and limitation of air forces."

Mr. Hull Offers Eight "Pillars of Peace"

HEADS of 21 delegations to the peace conference in Buenos Aires outlined national policies, and among them was Secretary of State Hull, who proposed a program containing what he termed "eight pillars of peace" upon which rest peace and prosperity. These were:

Secretary Hull

1. Internal quiet and education.
2. Frequent international conferences.
3. Swift ratification of existing peace pacts.
4. Adoption of a common neutrality policy.
5. Fair and equal commercial policies.
6. Practical international cooperation.
7. Strengthening of international law.
8. Faithful observance of the sanctity of treaties.

"There is no need for war," Hull said in his address. "There is a practical alternative policy at hand, complete and adequate. It is no exclusive policy aimed at the safety or supremacy of a few, leaving others to struggle with distressful situations. It demands no sacrifices comparable to the advantages which will result to each nation and to each individual.

"Peace can be partially safeguarded through international agreements. Such agreements, however, must reflect the utmost good faith; this alone can be the guarantee of their significance and usefulness."

Next day Mr. Hull offered a neutrality pact for all American republics. His plan would create a permanent inter-American consultative committee to co-ordinate existing peace instruments and bring agreement on a common neutrality policy, based on the United States' neutrality theory.

Midland Steel Strike Ended by Agreement

EMPLOYEES of the Midland Steel Products plant at Detroit returned to their work, having voted to accept a settlement of their strike which included wage adjustments and abolition of the piece work system. The strike had been seriously felt by the automobile industry.

The peace terms, which union leaders called a "90 per cent victory" for employees, provide for recognition of the union, a 45 hour week, time and a half pay for overtime and holidays, an increase of 10 cents an hour on the base rate of pay, and a 10 per cent increase on piece work until it is eliminated, which is to be done as rapidly as possible.

Pope Pius XI Stricken With Leg Paralysis

STRICKEN with paralysis that affected both his legs, Pope Pius XI was believed go be in a serious condition because he already was afflicted with asthma, arterio sclerosis and high blood pressure. At first the holy father flatly refused to submit to a medical examination, saying "I am in the hands of God," and he even insisted on dictating and signing letters. But later he was persuaded to take complete repose, which his physicians said was vitally necessary. Father Agostino Gemelli of Milan, a medical expert, was summoned to Vatican City and gave out a statement indicating that rigid measures were being taken to stave off possible uremic poisoning.

Pope Pius

The pope's illness was discovered when he was unable to arise for a ceremonial concluding a week of spiritual exercises. He was barely able to stir the left leg and physicians found that the heaviness of limb had spread also to the right leg.

Cardinal Pacelli, papal secretary of state, was more optimistic than many others. After a visit to the sick room he said:

"The pope is improved. In about a week the strong constitution of the holy father will win out over the illness. He is nearly eighty years of age and has never been confined to bed by illness. It is only natural that he should just for once feel indisposed."

Wheat Farmers Approve Crop Insurance Plan

LEADING wheat producers held a convention in Washington and gave their approval to Secretary Wallace's plan for crop insurance and the "ever normal granary." It was proposed that the federal government supply the initial capital to start the program, acquire and maintain warehouses and run the "all hazard" insurance program through a corporation.

A permanent wheat farmers' committee of fifteen was established to advance a program for participating farm groups and to exercise pressure for legislation. The committee was instructed to report by January 15. M. W. Thatcher is chairman.

Hamilton Will Resign as Republican Chairman

JOHN HAMILTON, chairman of the Republican national committee, called a meeting of that body to be held in Chicago December 17, and announced that at that time he would submit his resignation.

Mr. Hamilton desires that the committee shall be able to address itself to the plans for a party comeback with a clean slate and with new officers in command, if a change of personnel shall be deemed more conducive to success.

The management of the late campaign has been criticized by some leaders in the East, and also by a few of the most radical of the western leaders; but it may well be that the criticism represents only minority views of the committee and that Mr. Hamilton's resignation will not be accepted.

Vice President Garner Vexes Some Congressmen

CALLED back to Washington because he is acting President during the absence of Mr. Roosevelt, Vice President Garner promptly involved himself in the battle for the house leadership that is being waged by the supporters of John J. O'Connor of New York, chairman of the rules committee, and Sam Rayburn of Texas, chairman of the interstate commerce committee. Mr. Garner put himself behind his fellow Texan, declaring: "I am for Rayburn 200 per cent. He is the best equipped man for the job and I will do all I can to further his candidacy."

VicePresident Garner

O'Connor's friends and other representatives who had been neutral were astounded and angered by what they considered an unwarranted intrusion by the vice president into a house contest.

Treasury Financing Plans Told by Morgenthau

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY HENRY MORGENTHAU announced the mid-December financing operations of the treasury, the main features being further borrowing and refunding that will put the national debt above 34 billion dollars, lowered interest rates on government bonds and elimination of preferential treatment for the small investor. The secretary said that the December 15 financing, which includes the borrowing of 700 millions to cover continuation of deficits incurred, would be the last until March, when heavy income tax collections will pour into the treasury. Refunding raises the overall amount of the financing to $1,486,631,900.

In announcing that the treasury would not permit the small investor to have his subscription up to $5,000 met in full as in the past, but would be forced to accept a prorata share just as is the big bond buyer, Morgenthau declared that the public had "abused" the privilege. The plan "to give the little fellow a break" was initiated by Secretary Ogden Mills during the Hoover regime.

Russia's Constitution Given Final Approval

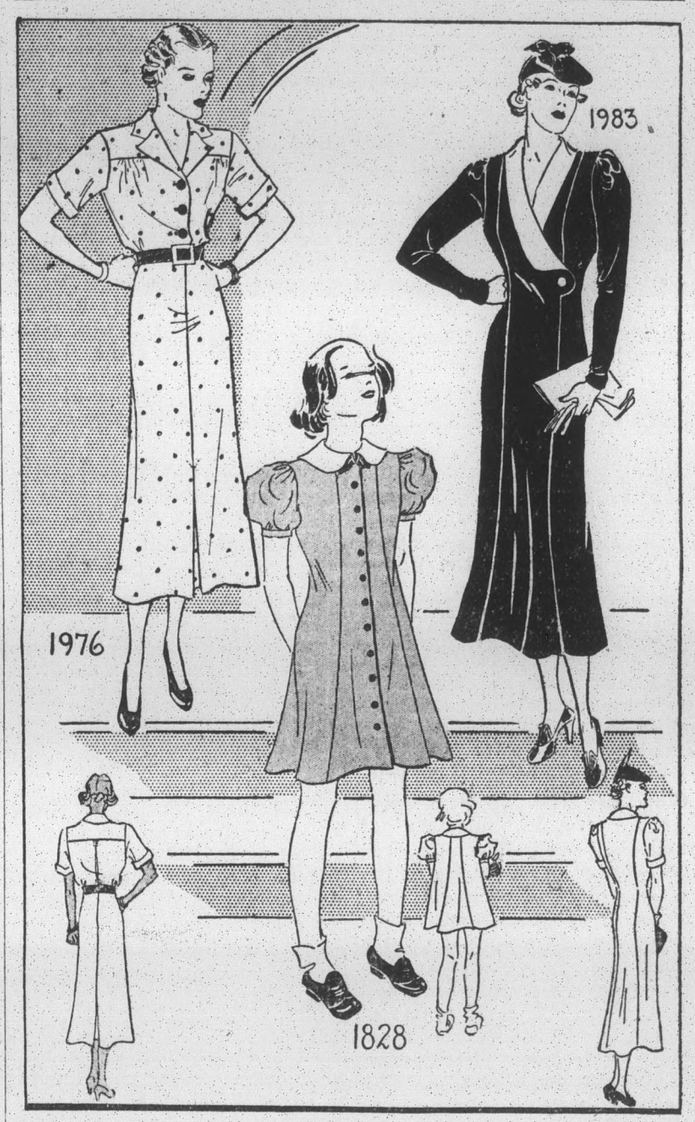
SOVIET RUSSIA'S new constitution received the final approval of the all-union congress of soviets, and the event was celebrated by a tremendous parade of the army and the civil population of Moscow. One revision of the original draft, made by the congress, authorizes the government to declare war "in case of necessity" instead of "in case of an armed attack against the U. S. S. R." This change was interpreted as bolstering the mutual aid treaty with France and also as a strong reply to the anti-communist agreement between Germany and Japan.

Williams Says WPA Rolls Must Be Decreased

"WHITE collar" members of the Workers' Alliance of America who called on Aubrey Williams to insist that no workers be dropped from the relief rolls were told by the acting WPA administrator that lack of funds made necessary the dropping of about 175,000 by December 15, and that 250,000 others would be transferred from drouth relief to the resettlement administration.

David Lasser, president of the Workers' Alliance, asserted that widespread strikes would result from the reduction of the rolls.

It's Princess Lines Again



AGAIN princess lines are riding the crest of the fashion wave. Good news for members of he Sewing Circle, for princess lines have always been favored by those who sew at home. And for morning wear, the timeless shirtmaker, a perennial choice for busy housewives.

The smart shirtwaister (Pattern 1976) is a utility frock distinguished for its trim lines and as easy to make as it is to wear. Suitable in any of a wide range of fabrics for a wide variety of needs from sun-up to sun-down, this extremely wearable number is available in a wide range of sizes. The notched collar is pert and youthful, there is fulness at the yoke, and the set-in sleeves fit well and wear forever. Send for Pattern 1976 in size 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, and 50. Size 36 requires 4⅜ yards of 35 inch gingham or percale or shantung.

The slick little princess model (Pattern 1828) needs little comment for the picture tells the story utterly simple. Has seven pieces to the pattern, including the collar and sleeve band, it is available in sizes 4, 6, 8, and 10 years. Size 8 requires 2⅛ yards of 35 inch fabric plus 2¼ yard contrast.

The lovely daytime princess frock (Pattern 1983) is a model which can be made and worn successfully by 36's as well as 50's. There is a choice of long or short sleeves and there is just enough contrast in the graceful collar to give the frock a smart touch of distinction. Likewise simple—just eight pieces including the collar and cuff—this pattern is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, and 50. Make it in satin, silk, crepe, sheer wool, broadcloth, challis, or linen. Size 38 requires 5⅜ yards of 39 inch or 3¾ yards of 54 inch fabric. Less with short sleeves.

Don't miss these grand numbers. A detailed sewing chart accompanies each pattern to guide you every step of the way.

Send for the Barbara Bell Fall and Winter Pattern Book containing 100 well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send fifteen cents in coins for your copy.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 149 New Montgomery Ave., San Francisco, Calif. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

"Deck The Halls With Boughs Of Ivy——"

When Christmas day arrives at the Coronado avenue home of Mrs. Richard Smith and her daughter, Miss Winnifred Smith, all the traditions surrounding the Old English yuletide will be revived as they entertain friends at dinner. The lited plum pudding will make an impressive entrance, its spicy fragrance mingling with that of the burning candles and holiday evergreens.

The guests will include Miss Helen Judson and Mrs. Julia Cooley of New York City, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Jarvis of Grand Rapids, Mich., Miss Mary Lytle, Miss Harriet Forrest, Dr. Ysabel Austin, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Sullivan and Mrs. Hooper, all of San Diego.

Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Troin will spend Christmas with their daughter, Mrs. Gertrude Rochefort, in San Pedro. They will also be holiday guests of friends in the Los Angeles-Long Beach area.

Club Has Holiday Program

At the last 1936 meeting of the Ocean Beach Woman's club, Mrs. Ella Smith, chairman of the arts and crafts department, presented a program last week which focused attention on the coming holiday. Mrs. Hattie Gaston, county chairman of arts and crafts, displayed a collection of handcrafts which had been exhibited at the recent district meet at Palm Springs, where San Diego county was the only one to make such an exhibit. Examples of linoleum block printing on cloth, combined cutwork and applique, "glorified rickrack", simulating elaborate embroidery, etc., suggested delightful gifts. Mrs. Gaston urged the club to take advantage of its status as a federated unit to secure instruction in any branch of arts and crafts.

Mrs. Chas. A. Tracy district treasurer and county chairman of gardens, greeted the club and took especial interest in the "flower of the month" sketch given by Mrs. F. C. Barks, local garden chairman, who had arranged a display of seasonal berried shrubs and spoke briefly on the Christmas flower, poinsettia, explaining that the apparent flame "petals" are actually floral leaves which surround the inconspicuous flowers in order to attract insects for pollenation.

Further suggestive of the holiday spirit were the Christmas songs presented by Mrs. Howard Taylor of Buffalo, N. Y., Mrs. Edward Oehser and Mrs. Lynn Winans. Mrs. L. W. Lee was accompanist.

Two new members, Mrs. C. H. Woolley and Mrs. Virginia Shulins were welcomed into the club.

Assisting Mrs. Smith were Mrs. Carrie Mason, Mrs. Mary Varney and Mrs. Blanche Wenrich, who were responsible for the refreshments served from a table beautifully decorated with poinsettias and red candles.

Coffee Cantata

The unusual and beautiful Federal concert at the Savoy theatre Monday evening was attended by Benedicite of Vaughan-Williams, which comprised the first half of the concert, Bach's deliteful Coffee Cantata, was offered for the first time, in costume, in America, with Joseph Santry, a Point Loma boy singing one of the principal roles.

Legends of Christmas Flowers

Dr. Lena Creswell will give a feature talk before the League of American Penwomen Monday when they meet at the home of Luisa Remondino Stahel. Appearing with Dr. Creswell on the program will be Elizabeth Sowersby the "Queen Elizabeth" of the Globe theatre, who will give Christmas readings.

Club Women Hostesses Tonite

A large interest is evident in the holiday card party to be given tonite by the Ocean Beach Woman's club for their building fund. Mrs. Lynn Winans heading the party committee, will be assisted by Mmes. Elizabeth Finley, Dora Bingham, Ralph Kimball, Lillian Kearney and Edythe Kenline. Tickets for card players will be available at the door.

This is the nite someone will find he has the lucky number for the Shirley Temple doll and her complete wardrobe.

Russian Choral Work For Vesper Service

The Seraphic Song of Anton Rubenstein will be the choral offering of the Point Loma Methodist choir, under the direction of Lynn Winans, at the vesper services in the church Sunday at 7:30 p. m. Mrs. Howard Taylor will be soloist for this choral work.

Coming Events

The Point Loma assembly, in celebrating its 25th anniversary Dec. 30, will initiate a movement to form a drama group representing the Point Loma area. No time has been as opportune as the present to begin such an organization for we have been made drama-conscious by the stimulation of the various federal agencies, the almost sensational interest in the Globe theatre run during the Exposition. and the activity of several little-theatre groups thruout the city.

Mrs. Kathryn Grey Santry, chairman of the drama committee, announces her assistants as Mmes. Edward Goodwin, George Culbertson, George Dale, James Dudley, F. Arthur Heilbron, Hattie Johnson, Milford J. Johnson, E. F. Linstrum, J. B. McFadden, Eric O. Tauer and Stanley Turner.

The club especially invites all Point Loma residents to help celebrate their anniversary party which will be markt by a dinner, entertainment and dancing. To promote an informal and gay time everyone is askt to come in costume or at least in a headdress.

Mrs. Braun To Present Art Series

A new departure in the study of art will be presented by Mrs. Maurice Braun in a series of monthly meetings beginning the second Tuesday in Jan., 10:30 a. m., in the California tower building.

Mrs. Braun will trace the history of art, stressing the universal idea underlying the various forms since paleolithic times. Her interpretation of the history of the world, based on art history, will be applied to civilization of the present and future.

The series is sponsored by the PTA and anyone is welcome to attend.

Silver Spray

Mr. and Mrs. John R. Egge are now living at the Silver Spray apartments. Mr. Egge is with the Consolidated Aircraft corporation.

Marvin Hodge and son, Clifford, from St. Louis, and Geo. Mc Manus, all with Consolidated Aircraft, are new residents at the Silver Spray.

Mrs. Ida C. Swartsel and daughter, of Denver, are at the Silver Spray for the winter months.

Mexican Weekend

Among many other "Estados Unidans" who motored to Ensenada Sunday were the Lawrence Krettlers. They have been particularly impresst with the beautiful natural harbor sheltering innumerable little fishing smacks. The landing of passengers and cargo from large ships, served by lighters, is adding a new interest to the lives of the natives.

Baby Arrives For Christmas

Just in time for Santa Claus, a baby boy was born to Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Edgar, 4659 Pescadero avenue, last Thursday, Dec. 10. True to a prediction made at a "forecast" shower recently given the mother, the young arrival's name is Walter Malcom. The 7½ pound boy and his mother are very well, thank you.

Christmas Gifts

PTA is asking cooperation of beach residents in their Christmas work. Clothing of all kinds is especially needed. Also odd bits of ribbon, paper and seals would be welcomed in order to make gifts for the Indians and other groups more attractive. Any contributions may be left for the welfare secretary at Ocean Beach school.

Max Miller Book Reviewed

"For the Sake of Shadows" is the inimitable account of Max Miller's career as a Hollywood writer. At the study department meeting Monday in Mrs. George Kenline's home, Mrs. Clyde Walters read the review of this fascinating book which had been prepared by Julia T. McGarvey. Newspapers and magazines have long made us familiar with the experiences of the actors but seldom have we seen an expose from the film writers' viewpoint. He bares with his own scathing style the mechanical production of Hollywood stories, and realises that an author writing under such pressure cannot long be true to himself.

Mrs. King Returns for Christmas

After spending almost four months in the east, Mrs. H. L. King returned home Friday in time for Christmas with her sister, Miss Josephine Lucas. Mrs. King was in New York City with her son until the day after Thanksgiving, when she left for Florida, joining her brother in St. Petersburg. After enjoying the bowling and other pleasant activities of the beautiful peninsular city, she returned by the northern route.

A comment surely of interest to San Diegans was made by Mrs. King upon recalling the trip thru Carrizo Gorge between here and Imperial Valley. The name of the deep cut is taken from the reed-like plant carrizo, so plentiful in that vicinity and commonly used by the Indians in their basket making.

Holidays in Los Angeles

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Todd will spend Christmas in Los Angeles where they will be the guests of Mrs. Todd's brother, Dr. David W. Smouse, until after New Years.

Desert Christmas

To assure themselves of much Christmas sunshine, Mrs. George W. Damron and her daughter, Georgia, of Alligator Rock Lodge, will go to their El Centro home Dec. 21, where they will remain thruout the holidays with the rest of their family.

Short Notes

At the Court of Honor in Indian Village Friday evening two Ocean Beach Boy Scouts, John Glithero and Don Horner, were presented their Star awards.

E. Boyce, of Cape May avenue, returned last week after five months spent in Honolulu with the submarine force. He expects to leave for Honolulu again during the spring maneuvers.

Jack Kirchmaier is preparing to build two houses next to the two which were recently completed by his brother, C. J. Kirchmaier, on Coronado between Ebers and Froude streets.

Dr. and Mrs. N. A. Baker of Glendale, who are frequent Beach visitors were here last week to see Dr. Baker's mother.

Things Past

A pre-holiday musicale and party was given Friday evening in Wallace hall by music pupils of Mrs. Edith Reich in honor of their parents and friends. Group singing of Christmas carols was combined with a program of piano, mandolin and guitar music. Games and refreshments climaxed an enjoyable evening.

Martha Froide, Cecelia Martin, and Nellie Willis were hostesses to the Episcopal choir and church boys' club last Thursday when they cooked and served a delicious dinner to the group.

Point Loma troop No. 56 of the Girl Scouts, were responsible for the beautiful Christmas tableaux presented upon the occasion of the Girl Scouts second annual bazaar in Balboa park, Saturday afternoon. Those of the Point Loma troop participating were Julia Kelly, Addie Fish, Grace Oliver, Martha Sterne, Mary Belle Drinkwater, and Betty Bright. The gypsy fortune tellers were Mrs. Myra Rife Smith and Mrs. Seth Hazard.

A large party of Ocean Beach women attended the Christmas dessert-bridge given for the East San Diego Episcopal church by Mrs. George Prentice who entertained at seventeen tables in her home, 2845 3rd avenue. Among those invited were Mrs. J. C. Glithero, daughter of the hostess; Mrs. L. R. Bingham, Mrs. Clayborne Kearney, Mrs. James Oliver, Mrs. Harry Willis, Miss Mary Clarke, Mrs. J. D. Kinnaird, and Mrs. Orville Farley.

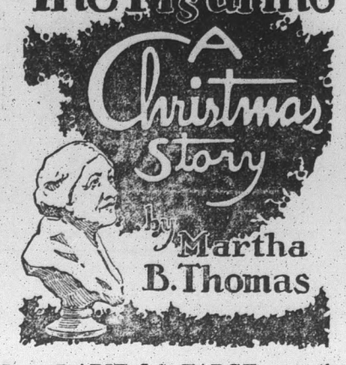
The Figurine
A Christmas Story
by Martha B. Thomas



MARIE LA FARGE was the prettiest girl in Beaulaire. Her dark eyes sparkled; her black hair framed a lovely, vivid face. It was inevitable that many young men should fall in love with her. Which they did. But chief among them was tall handsome Jules Gareau, the son of a wood-carver.

Marie's mother was a small hard-working woman whose beauty differed from the girl's. Strong lines were graven on her face; and in her eyes shone clear fortitude. Madame La Farge's eyes looked steadily at everything, whether it was the snow which lay so many months about the small tight cabin, or at one of her children who had, perhaps been angry or selfish. So, while Marie's face was sweet and winning, her mother's expression was full of character.

It could hardly fail that Marie should grow a little arrogant under the circumstances. "You are unkind to me," said Jules one day. "I have loved you always, yet you act as if it did not matter. And now you tell me you are going away from here." He waved his arm.

"What is that to you?" Marie was dressed in bright jacket, full woolen skirt and high, laced boots. A red knitted cap was pulled jauntily over her curls.

"How can you ask such a question of me?" Jules reproved her.

"A girl cannot stay in this simple village forever!"

"But Marie." He reached for her mittened hand. His eyes, looking down at her, were filled with beseeching love. "We had plans together, you and I. Already father has given me the land. Already I have cut the timbers for our house . . . have you forgotten?"

Marie laughed goodnaturedly. "You handsome stupid . . . ! I must see a bit of the world before settling down to . . ." she nodded towards her own house where her mother stood in the door, calling to one of the children. "You see?" said Marie, "she's worn out with work. She's old before her time. She wears old clothes and thinks old thoughts . . . It cannot be otherwise, here in Beaulaire."

"Your mother," replied Jules sternly, "has the most truly beautiful face in the village. My father says so."

Marie raised her long lashes in surprise, and shrugged her shoulders. A week before Christmas the girl left the village. "I have a position. During the holidays extra girls are needed in the stores. Soon I shall have money of my own. Soon I shall dance and go places with many fine people."

"So that is what you are thinking," said her mother. But she added no words of advice or reprimand. "Don't forget us, child. Think of us at Christmas with the white snow about us, and the green spruces on the hills. Think of your father in the woods, chopping. Think of me cooking, and mending and singing to the baby . . . and nothing shall go wrong with you. Come home when it seems best. We love you."

But Jules was silent and heartbroken. "You'll never be the same to me, Marie, again. Your head will be filled with idle notions. And to think you can go and leave us at Christmas!"

But Marie went. And if they missed her sadly in the village where she was born, she worked hard. And because of her energy and lovely face, she was kept on in her position after the holidays. She sent presents home but she did not go there. She liked her new life.

One year. Two years. For one reason or another she never found time to visit her people. She was doing well. She was thrifty. She went about with this or that admiring escort. And she smothered the occasional pangs of homesickness in her heart.

Five years away. Now and then she heard from Jules, short letters which related how her father had cut his hand chopping wood. How her brother had fallen through the ice and was rescued. How her mother was just the same. "Everyone loves her," wrote Jules.

Then one day Marie happened to meet an artist named Tom Santos. "You are so very beautiful, I must paint you at once," declared this impulsive young man.

Marie laughed at him, but it soon happened that she posed regularly for this brilliant painter. She liked his queer, jerky way of talking while he worked. She felt that she was lucky to be admired by him. One day in the studio he asked about her home. Marie told him a little, rather grudgingly.

"You say you were born in Beaulaire?" cried the man. "How odd!"

He laid down his brushes and went to a shelf. "One of the finest wood-carvers in Quebec made this. A young man called Jules Gareau." He picked up a small figurine and held it in his hands.

Marie felt a quick trembling run all over her. "Oh," she breathed, "Jules never told me he had taken up his father's work!"

"You know him then . . . this artist Jules?"

"Yes," she answered stepping down from the dias where she posed. "Let me see, please."

Tom gave her the small figurine as if it were something precious.

"Oh," She Breathed, "Jules Never Told Me."

"Look at the pose," he said, "Look at the old woman's face. Isn't she wonderful . . . and beautiful in character? I'd like to meet her."

"You shall," murmured Marie in a low voice, and added, "I must stay away from home for years, before I discover from a stranger how fine my mother is. Come . . . we can catch the evening train."

Snow lay thick on Beaulaire that Christmas eve. Bright lights shone from the houses. The mountains were dark with purple shadows.

Two figures walked along the squeaking snow. "How could you have left all this for an ugly city, Marie?"

The girl answered nothing. She hurried faster and her heart beat furiously. "I cannot wait to get there," she thought.

"Over there," she said aloud, "is the Gareau home, and now, here we come to our house. Hurry, hurry!"

They pushed through the gate; they entered the house without knocking. A huge fire blazed on the hearth. Singing and dancing filled the low-ceilinged room. Marie pulled her friend towards a slight figure sitting in a chair. "This is my mother," she said.

At once the room was in an uproar. People flocked about the new guests, all talking together, kissing Marie, laughing and shouting.

But Tom Santos bent low over Madame La Farge's hand. "I'm proud and happy to know you. Yes—" looking at her critically, "Gareau is a genius."

Marie with a new light and radiance about her next pulled him to a tall young man standing by the fire. "And, this is Jules," she explained simply. "Jules Gareau." The two men shook hands.

"Please, please, all of you," she cried, "be quiet!"

The room fell into silence.

"I have been away a long while," began the girl, "But I am home again. I have neglected you all, but chiefly my family. But now, on Christmas eve, I come to my senses . . . and you!" Her lovely smile encircled them all. "Mother, the figureine which Jules carved of you, brought me back. I could not wait, for then I knew how I'd missed you."

A murmur of pleasure ran about the room.

"Jules," her voice faltered, blushes rose in her cheeks, "are you still .?" She could not finish.

The tall handsome young man, as if in a dream, strode close to her. "No, Marie, I'm not married. I've waited so long for you."

And then uproar rose again. They danced. They feasted. And Marie sat close to her mother, and looked and looked at that kind, strong, forgiving face.

And all the children fell asleep and were waked up again, and Marie's father roared with laughter.

Thus Marie La Farge came back to the village of Beaulaire . . . and Jules.
